A quantitative determination of the tissue concentration of non-isotopic amino acids in positron emission tomography. A procedure for the simultaneous quantitation of nine non-isotopic amino acids in fresh specimens, freeze-dried or autopsied tissue and plasma is described. The method is based on the separation of the compound of interest from other biological constituents, reduction to their corresponding amine metabolites and quantitation of these using high-performance liquid chromatography. When applied to an in vivo biodistribution study, the amount of labelled amino acid incorporated in various tissues was quantitated and the radiochemical enrichment of the most concentrated tissues was calculated.
